

Don't Focus on the Outcome

Embrace the autotelic approach to street photography by creating simply for the sake of creating. This philosophy keeps you rooted in the joy of the process itself rather than in any final outcome.

Take Your Time

Photography is not a race. It often takes months or even years to create a photograph you feel truly proud of. Here's how to approach this:

- Pace Yourself: Don't rush; take your time to observe and engage.
- Make Photos Daily: Shoot often, but without pressure or expectation.
- Learn Patience: Remember that it's normal for the process to feel open-ended.

The Experience is the Reward

The true value in photography often lies in the experience rather than in the final photograph. Ask yourself: Are you enjoying yourself on the street? If yes, then you're already succeeding. Focus on these aspects:

- Enjoy the Process: Seek pleasure in the act of photographing itself.
- Create for Yourself: Let the street be your canvas, capturing moments because they resonate with you—not for external validation.
- Savor the Journey: The reward is in the experience, not the outcome.

Letting go of expectations allows you to approach photography as an unfolding journey—one where every frame contributes to your growth and enjoyment in the art.
