

The Joy of Photography

Photography provides my life with ultimate joy. When I'm out with a camera, I forget about the past and the future—my mind exists only in the now. This pure focus fuels my lust for life, and every photograph I take feels like I'm carving meaning into each day.

Photography as Bliss

When I'm photographing, it's like I'm stepping into a meditative state. I'm not just looking; I'm seeing—understanding the patterns of both human behavior and nature. When everything aligns, and I know exactly when to press the shutter, it's like having a superpower. This feeling is something no other medium can match.

“Walking through life with a camera brings a sense of wonder and curiosity that only a child can have.”

Photography is bliss, a chance to experience life with fresh eyes every single day. Each shot is like a new brushstroke on the canvas of my life.

Give Your Life Meaning

Photography gives my life meaning. Each morning, I wake up wondering what's out there, curious about the questions life might answer with each new photograph. Photography has given me a purpose I haven't found elsewhere. I don't shoot for an audience or to keep up with trends; I shoot to capture my view of the world.

“Define what life means to you through what you decide to include within your photographs.”

By letting curiosity drive my camera, I feel fulfilled in ways that go beyond the frame. I suggest making pictures for yourself first—forget the concepts, gear, or projects; just go out there and let curiosity guide you.

Create Your Own World

When I look back through my archives, I see a world entirely my own. It's a perspective that only I can capture, a personal worldview that gives me pride and a sense of accomplishment. When you make photos, you're creating your own world, a unique view that others might never see.

"Photography is joyful because you can express yourself and share your world with others."

Photography is both expression and connection—a way to share the essence of your vision with others, without any words at all.

A Stream of Becoming

Treat each photograph like a step in a stream of becoming. Photography isn't about getting the "perfect" shot; it's about capturing the fleeting moments and moving on. Each new photograph builds on the last, creating a continuous flow.

"Imperfection is perfection."

Let go of perfectionism. Treat each image as a fleeting sketch, one step in a lifelong journey of seeing and creating. Don't worry about what's perfect; focus on what's next.

Photography as a Gift

Photography is a universal language, like music or dance. It's a way to connect across cultures and to break down barriers. When I travel, I bring along a Fujifilm Instax camera so I can gift photos to people I meet. A simple print can transcend language barriers and open doors, letting me share a moment with someone new.

“Treat your camera like a passport—your key to exploring new stories, meeting new people, and unlocking new experiences.”

Curiosity is the Goal

The ultimate goal of a photographer is simple: remain curious. This curiosity should be a constant, allowing you to see the mundane with fresh eyes. Photography lets you create your own world, existing outside the passage of time.

“Ask yourself: what will reality manifest to be in a photograph?”

When you approach each day as a fresh start, with curiosity and openness, every ordinary scene has the potential to become extraordinary.

Final Thoughts and Key Points

1. Photography as Joy and Meaning: Let each photograph fill you with joy and give your life meaning.
2. Curiosity and Wonder: Approach photography with the curiosity and wonder of a child.
3. Create Your Own World: Use photography to build a world that reflects your perspective.
4. A Stream of Becoming: View each photograph as a step in a continuous journey, not as an endpoint.
5. The Gift of Photography: Use your camera to connect with others, transcending language and cultural barriers.
6. Embrace Imperfection: Let go of perfectionism; sometimes, imperfection is

7. Curiosity is Key: Always ask yourself, “What will reality manifest to be in a photograph?”

Photography isn't just about taking pictures; it's about building a life rich with meaning and curiosity. Let each image become a testament to your lust for life, and let that curiosity keep you photographing until the very end.
