

Why Root for the Underdog?

I've noticed that people generally root for the underdog.

Maybe this stems from an excessive emotional state and an abundance of empathy. Perhaps it's because misery loves company, making it easier for people to identify with those who are struggling or suffering.

In rooting for the underdog, people may find a reflection of their own challenges, drawing comfort from shared vulnerability.