

Every Single Day is New

A Mini Death and a Mini Birth

Every night is a mini death, and every morning, a mini birth. The cycle of life plays out daily, offering us the chance to start anew. While it may feel like we're living the same life on repeat, each day carries its own nuances and changes.

"Just listen to the birds chirping, the chatter of strangers, and become enamored by the mundane patterns of both nature and human behavior."

Finding Beauty in the Mundane

Even in the repetition, life offers subtle differences. The sounds of the morning, the rhythm of daily routines—these are opportunities to witness beauty in the seemingly ordinary. Nature and human behavior unfold in intricate patterns, each worth noticing and appreciating.

How Would a Child Wake Up Each Morning?

Curious. Playful. Unburdened by seriousness. A child greets each morning with wonder and excitement, ready to explore the world anew. This, I believe, is the ultimate goal for any artist:

"To wake up each morning with child-like curiosity."

It's through this lens that we can approach our art and life, free from pretense and full of discovery.

Key Ideas:

- Each day is a chance for renewal.
- Even the mundane carries beauty if we take the time to notice.
- Approaching life with child-like curiosity fuels creativity and joy.
