

What Is the Goal of an Artist?

A Question Worth Asking

As artists, what drives us? When we venture into the world armed with our camera, paintbrush, pencils, or instruments, what are we truly seeking? Ultimately, what is the goal of an artist?

---

To Articulate the Unknown

At its core, the artist's journey is about articulating the unknown. When I step onto the streets with my camera, I am not merely documenting—I am bringing order to chaos. Street photography, for me, is a way to confront the world's unpredictability.

"I'm sending myself into the abyss, the unknown. I respond to the world as it comes to me, photographing with serendipity, and observing candid life as it unfolds."

Through the lens, I make sense of the world around me. Each photograph brings me closer to understanding life's essence, revealing fragments of its meaning.

---

Sharing Your Perspective

Perhaps the ultimate goal of an artist is simple yet profound: to share your perspective. Everything you experience is filtered through your unique lens. Your interpretation of the world—rooted in your direct encounters and reflections—holds value.

"The experiences you have can then be translated through the medium you choose to express yourself with."

Whether you're writing a poem, composing a song, or making photographs, your art becomes a reflection of your soul. It's not just about creating something beautiful; it's about offering the world a glimpse of how you see, feel, and understand life.

---

The Artist's Role

- Articulate the unknown: Bring order and understanding to life's chaos.
  - Express your unique vision: Share your interpretation of the world.
  - Evoke your soul: Let your art speak to the depth of your experiences.
-

Key Takeaway:

The goal of an artist is not just to create, but to communicate—to reveal the unseen, articulate the unknown, and share a piece of their soul with the world.